

aix

Aix is a sans-serif font created by Heike Kupp.

Inspired by type such as Pirou, Aix explores the skeleton of sans-serif typefaces.

It's most unique charactics come from the intersection of it's pieces and it's rounded corners.

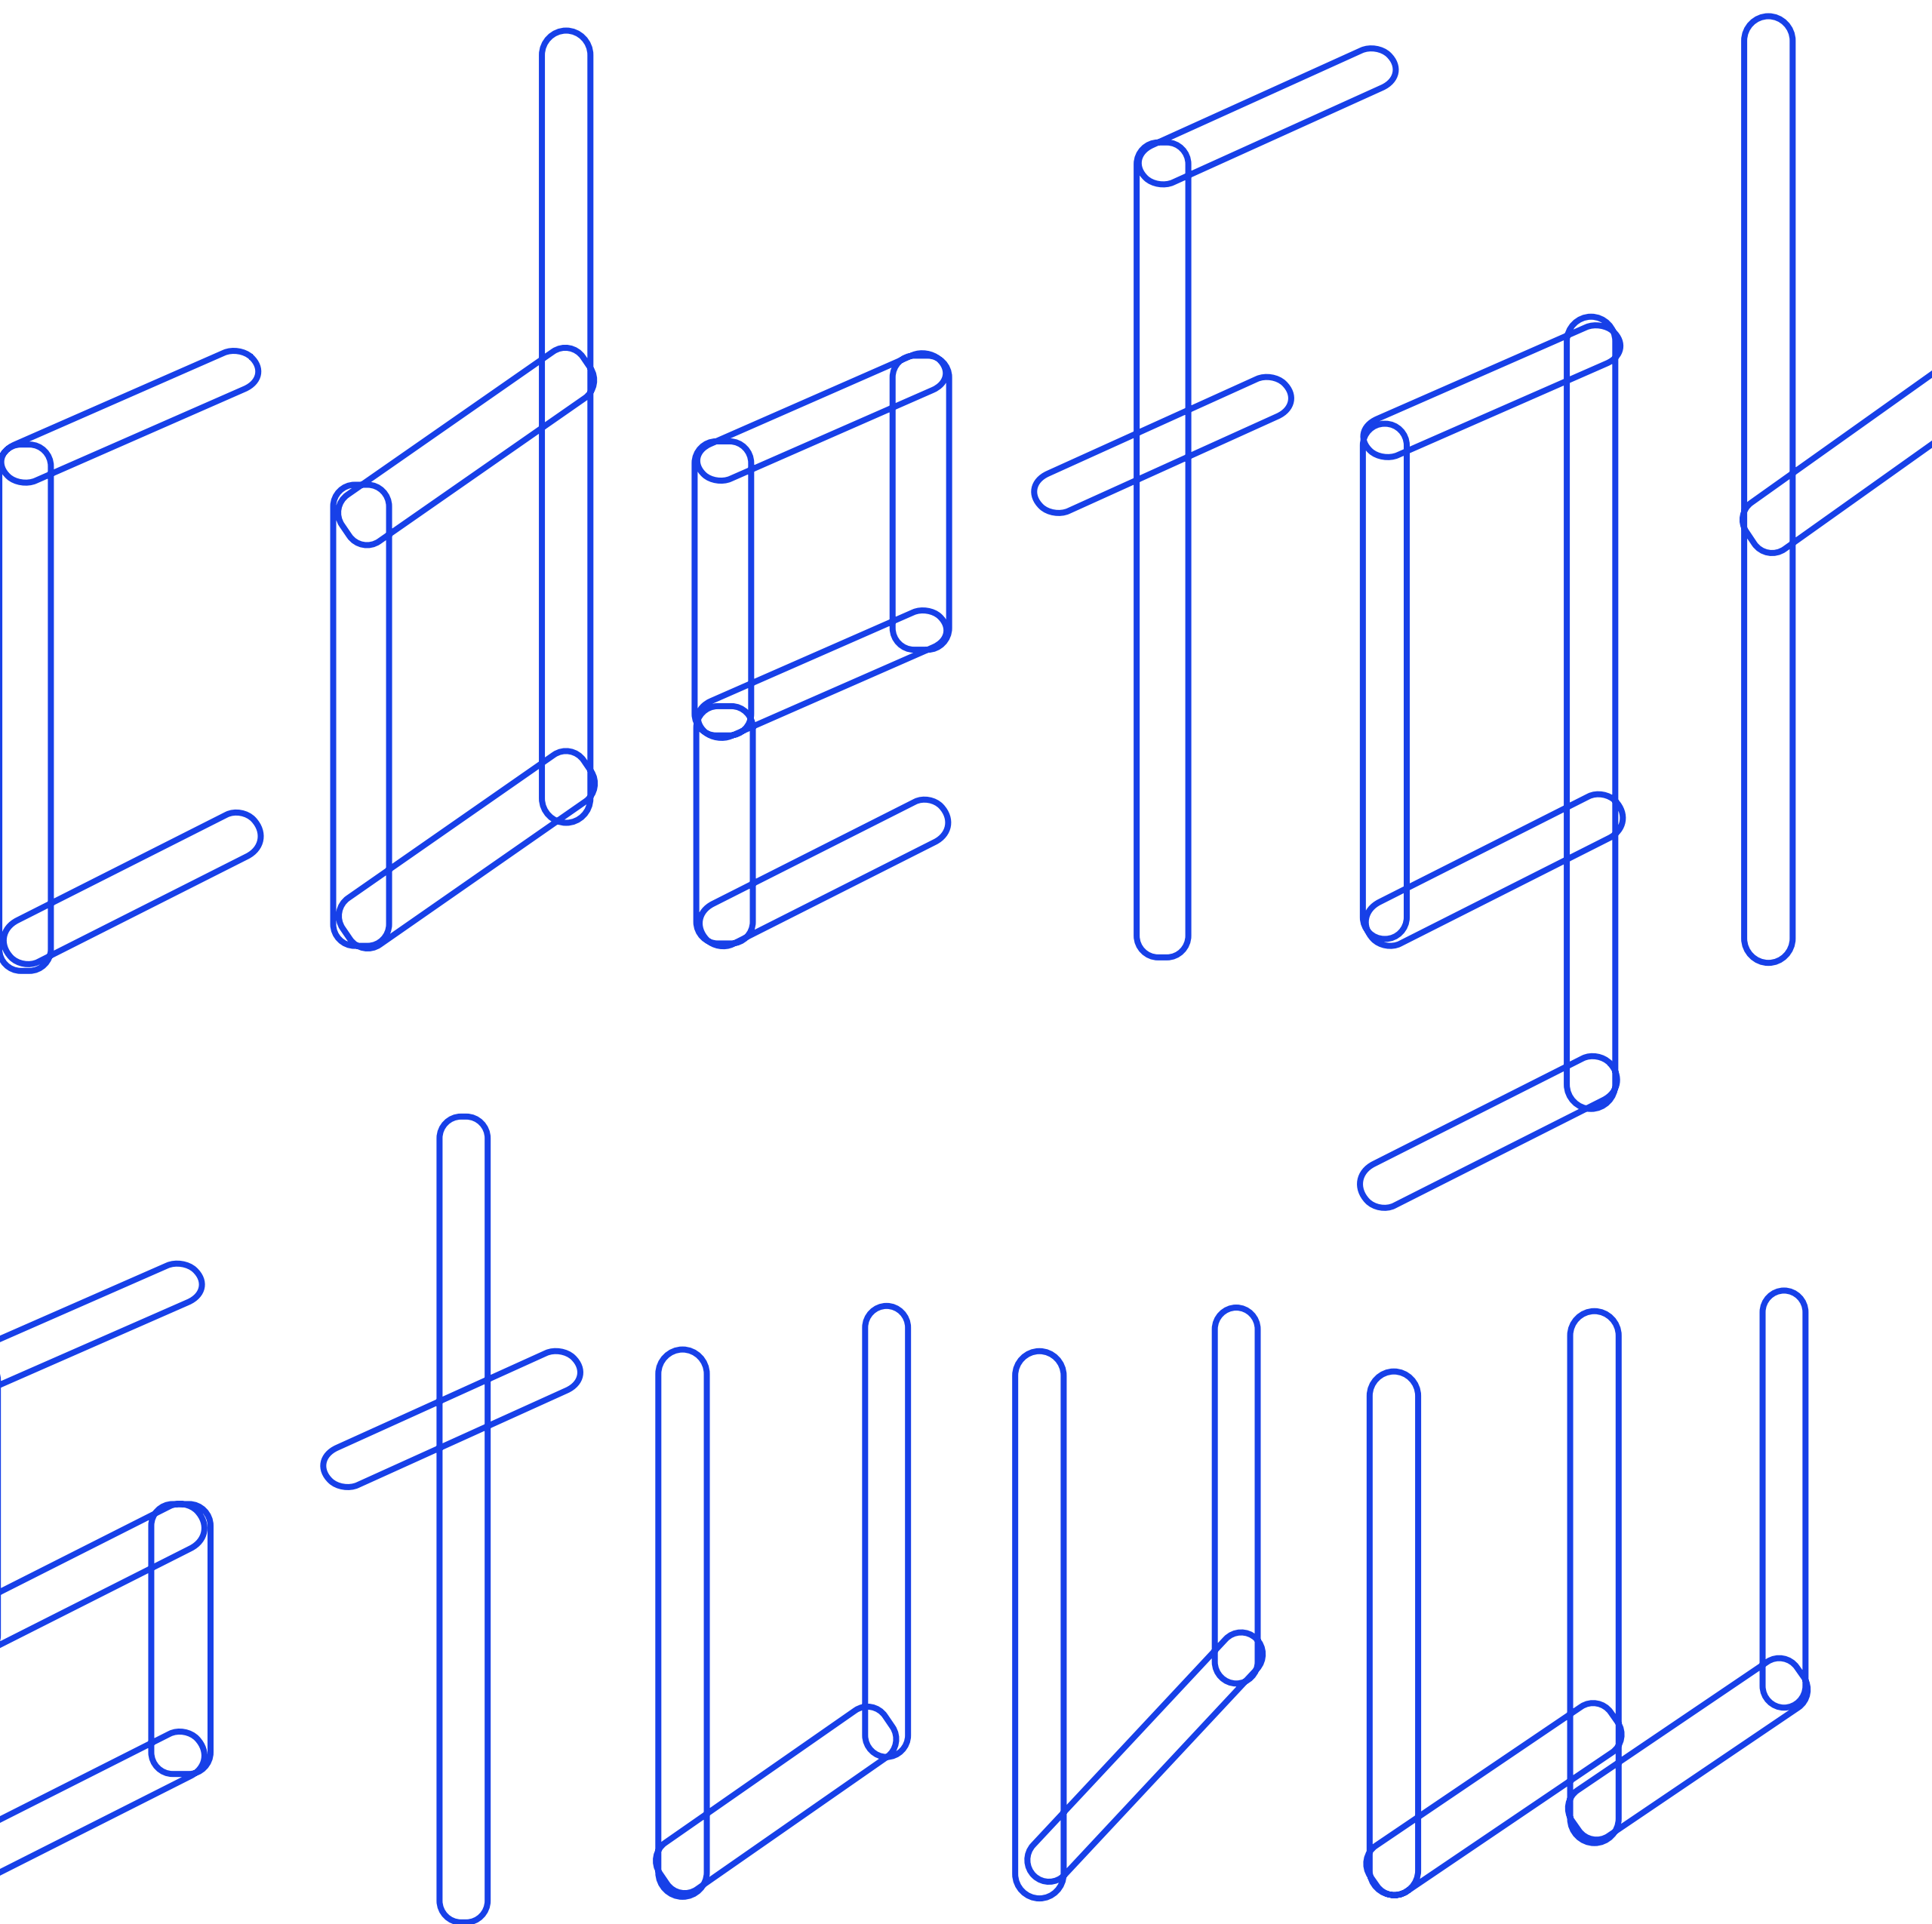

Created as an experiment of the nature of typography within the web, Aix serves as a way of understanding the versatility of the web and how it can enhance the way in which we communicate.

Aix changes states upon hover in order to emphasize it's use as a webfont.
It is not static, rather always changing but still exhibits it's natural intent: to replicate the bones of slanted rounded fonts (much like an x-ray).
